

participant quotes

Most estate planning workshops are legal-focused. This one is human-focused. What a refreshing way to look at this topic of putting your house in order.”

— Joe H.

I can sum up how I felt after taking the PYHIO workshop: Relieved! It laid everything out for me, making it easy to take the next steps, complete the binder, and tell my kids where it is, so they won't be left with difficult decisions.

— Pastor Doug Day

This program is like a breath of fresh air for estate planning. It doesn't just focus on the financial side of things, but also on the emotional and spiritual aspects that come with it.”

— Rev. Chris Abel

putting your house in order

putting your house in order

put your house in order, and make your wishes known

Are there things you'd like to get in order that would make your intentions clear for your loved ones if you become incapacitated or after you're gone? Things like:

- How to organize your financial affairs and gather important documents.
- How to put together a will or trust that reflects your wishes.
- How to have open conversations with loved ones about sensitive but important decisions.
- The people, memories, and dates that have been significant in your life.
- What you'd like your service of remembrance to include.
- And so much more!

While these are all important, they can also be emotional and difficult to discuss or discern. But when in order, they are an amazing gift from you to your loved ones.

care for your family, church and community

End-of-life planning can feel overwhelming, but lack of planning causes untold heartache for too many in their families, in our congregations and the community.

let us help guide you

This free 90-minute workshop includes a complimentary Putting Your House in Order binder for each attendee filled with information, checklists, and easy-to-use forms for gathering all the key information and recording – not just the facts – but participants' intentions, hopes, and values.

A Foundation representative is also available to follow up with participants individually, answering questions and assisting participants in discerning their final wishes.

discern your legacy

Rev. Laura Murphy presents the material with a pastor's heart and the life experience of a daughter, spouse, mother, and friend. Her approach helps participants discover how to have conversations with their loved ones about their wishes while also forming meaningful legacies that can flow from this prudent planning and organization.

all are welcome

People of all ages and stages of life are welcome to attend either as individuals or as couples. Having a will or other previous plans discerned is not necessary. This workshop is not soliciting any legal or financial services. For parents of dependent children, there is also information about guardianship.
